

02_0016 summary

Leo Bretholz discusses escaping from a train headed to Drancy; his experience during liberation in Limoge, France; his search for his family; how he supported himself during the war; his immigration to the United States from France after the war; his life in Baltimore and his views on segregation; the community group he founded, Prejudiced Anonymous, and their open speeches against hate; his survivor guilt; his family in America; his views on religion and a Jewish state; his feelings about going back to his birthplace in Vienna; his relationships with other survivors.