

Amaile Salsitz discusses her various false identities during WW II; working as a secretary for the German army in Poland; being liberated in Kraków, Poland; meeting her husband in the Polish underground; helping the Polish underground gain access to German documents; escaping Communism and going to West Germany; her difficulties in immigrating to the United States; arriving in New York; becoming a Hebrew teacher; going to Israel; starting a family; how the memory of her experiences during the Holocaust affects her daily life; her views on Israel and Israeli politics; religion; testifying against Holocaust perpetrators; and her views on contemporary acts of genocide.