

Adam Starkopf discusses his family and prewar life in Warsaw, Poland; his brother's move to Palestine; the outbreak of the war in Poland; getting wounded while enlisting in the Polish army; the invasion of Poland by the Russian army; returning to Warsaw; the death of his mother; living in the Warsaw ghetto; being imprisoned by the Gestapo; the liquidation of the Warsaw Ghetto to the concentration camp, Treblinka; escaping the ghetto; his family living as Roman Catholics; liberation by Russian forces; escaping Communism and going to the American zone in Germany; staying in the displaced persons camp, Feldafing; immigrating to the United States; his life in Chicago; his post-war family life; his book, "There is Always Time to Die"; anti-Semitism in the United States; speaking about the Holocaust to school children; his penny project; religion; and how he and his family cope with the memory of their experiences during the Holocaust.